Notice on Media Coverage of Toshiba's Nuclear Business

TOKYO—Today's edition of the Nikkei reported that "Toshiba's loss will reach over 500 billion yen," and NHK reported that "Toshiba plans to raise finances of around 300 billion yen by selling businesses and assets." These reports are not based on any announcements by Toshiba.

As stated in Toshiba's December 27th announcement, "Possibility of Recognition of Goodwill and Loss related to Westinghouse's Acquisition of CB&I Stone & Webster," the recognition of good will and loss related to the acquisition of CB&I Stone & Webster could reach a level of several billion US dollars (several hundred billion yen). At this moment, the figures are still subject to determination, and measures against the possible impact are under study.

Toshiba will announce the impact on its consolidated forecast and its proposed countermeasures once the impact is clear.
